2. [ ] Chinese Communist authorities in Chungshan (113-36, 22-22) Hsien were maintaining a close check on the families of overseas Chinese, attempting to obtain detailed information on the whereabouts, personal history, activities, income, education and political leanings of overseas relatives. All letters to and from them are censored. Money remitted to China by them cannot be used without the approval of the local Farmers' Association, which determines the amount required for living expenses for the family. All money beyond this amount must be deposited in banks controlled by the Communists and cannot be withdrawn without approval of the Association.*
